Balloon angioplasty has emerged as the therapy of choice for the treatment of aortic coarctation. It has been shown to have a low recurrence rate and to be an effective treatment for patients with associated ventricular septal defect, hypoplastic aortic arch, and branch pulmonary artery stenosis. More recently, a number of endovascular treatments have been described. The principal advantage of these procedures is the avoidance of balloon angioplasty related complications. A review of these endovascular techniques and the published data on them will be presented. The real investment in our children's future starts in the womb. It doesn't matter how much you have, or what kind of school your child goes to, if the baby in your womb is sick or malnourished, your child has an unfair start in life. This is because when a mother is pregnant, she is just as likely to be undernourished or suffering from a deadly disease. As women, we must take control of our own health and reproductive 2d92ce491b
