it says, they could have cut back on the product's consumption. Last year, the FDA warned the company to recall all Raisin Bran, but the company refused to do so. "It's disappointing that the FDA is forcing the company to pay such a huge penalty for failing to take reasonable steps to protect the health of consumers," said food safety lawyer Lisa Papademetriou, who represents the industry. According to Del Monte, its average profit margin on Raisin Bran is around 35%. In other words, it's relatively cheap to make the product, so the profit margin is relatively large. "Such large profit margins have historically been good business models to hide problems that can be revealed in a recall," Papademetriou added
